

Enterprises grow more savvy over open source

Open source icon Stormy Peters recently joined us for a live Network World of Open Source event. Peters is a member of the GNOME Foundation and director of community and partner programs for OpenLinux. She discussed how enterprises don't know how much open source software they use, how newbies and non-profits are driving the open source movement and why she thinks open source software is more secure than proprietary software.